

YOUR CORPORATE GUIDE TO

Lytham Green Drive Golf Club

WELCOME TO LYTHAM GREEN DRIVE GOLF CLUB

Founded in 1913 and registered as "Lytham Golf Club Ltd," the club first opened with a match on Saturday 3rd May, between the Captain Mr James Wallace and the President and Landlord Mr J T Clifton, which was played over 9 holes. The course then became 18 holes in early 1914.

Measuring at 6309 yards, the course is not particularly long, but it is a demanding yet enjoyable test of your golfing skills.

The course is set in mature parkland and was designed by renowned course architect, Dr Alister Mackenzie, who was the original designer of such courses as Augusta, Royal Melbourne and Cypress Point.

Lytham Green Drive was used as a final qualifying course for the 1974, 1979 and 1988 British Open Championships.

Our Half-Way House is always stocked with a range of hot and cold beverages and quick snacks to prepare you for the tougher back nine.

Lytham Green Drive has a reputation as probably the friendliest and most sociable golf club on the Fylde. This reputation is gained over many years by feedback from visitors and guests alike.

You can be assured that a warm welcome and friendly atmosphere awaits you before and after the perfect round of golf.

OUR HISTORY

When the First World War broke out, the Club struggled to keep its members due to the young men being called to the colours. This situation, after negotiation, led to the Club being taken over by the then Lytham Urban Council in 1916.

They ran the club until 1923, when under the leadership of Mr W H Marsden it returned to private status once again. This was achieved with a membership of 300 and the new company now being called "Lytham (Green Drive) Golf Club Ltd."

Major changes came in the 1940's, when Mr James A Steer came to Green Drive as the professional in 1939 after Blackpool Golf Club closed due to a runway extension at the airport.

Mr Steer is an excellent architect, designing courses such as Fairhaven, Fleetwood, Southport and Ainsdale to name but a few.

The course we play today is that designed by James Steer except for minor changes brought about by recommendations from the R & A and the acquisition of the club in 1996.

Since then, two large practice areas have been added, the second hole was extended and a new third hole was added in 2004.

We celebrated our Centenary in 2013 where a commemorative plaque was placed near the putting green.

Today the course is an extremely good test of golf whilst being very picturesque with its wild life, ponds and tree lined fairways.

Making your garden wildlife friendly

There are approximately 15 million gardens in the UK with some estimates putting their collective area at up to three million acres. Since 1900 Britain has lost at least 154 species of animal and 109 species of plant.

Much of this is due to the loss of habitat from housing, industrial developments and changes in farming practices.

If each of us that have a garden does just one or two little things to help the remaining wildlife then it will have a much better chance of surviving.

The UK has lost 90% of its lowland ponds so those in our gardens have a very important role to play in preserving the fascinating creatures found in them.

As a bonus the frogs and toads will eat the slugs and snails that have been munching their way through our plants

If you are thinking of planting a tree, firstly make sure it is the right size for your garden. Secondly consider choosing a native species.

In a recent study it was found that over 284 species were associated with the Oak, 15 with the Sycamore and none with the Plane tree. This diversity is the keystone to the success of our wildlife garden.

There are a lot of us that only have a back yard or balcony and feel that there is little that we can do, but this is not so.

A bird table or a bird bath will attract lots of different species who, once they know that food or water is available will return regularly. Hang up feeders and fill them with peanuts or specialist bird food.

There are many places to obtain advice on wildlife gardening, your local library, the web, your local wildlife club. A good start for birds is the R.S.P.B, www.rspb.org.uk.

For other wildlife try the Wildlife Trust. Most important of all, relax, do not get hung up about it, anything you do is a help. Do something, sit back and enjoy the show.
